Char Chanukah sameiach. It feels good to be entering Chanukah right after Thanksgiving this year, the warmth of gathering with family spreading from holiday to holiday.

I've been thinking a lot, as our nation edges back from the cliffs of the coronavirus, about trust. Trust is raised up as a virtue in Jewish thought. Trust in God—bitachon—is in fact one of the middot, the aspects of God that we are invited to emulate. (I hope you'll attend Rabbinic Intern Elli Pripas' Introduction to Mussar class, which will delve into cultivating middot, on December 9!) Jewish thought most commonly verbalizes bitachon through an image of God as our ultimate, reliable "good provider," Who puts food on our tables. We quote the prophet Jeremiah on God in our grace after meals: "Baruch hagever asher yivtach b'Adonai, v'hayah Adonai mivtacho." Blessed is the man who trusts in God, and God is the source of his confidence.¹ We may just have expressed our joy in God's fulfillment of our trust through harvest bounty and our survival, and perhaps comfort and even surfeit, in this past Thanksgiving holiday. Classical sources describe bitachon as a powerful tool that can alleviate our anxiety about whether and how our needs will be met, by trusting that God has it all under control, even if we and other people don't.

When I trust others more fully in the context of community, everyone wins. Trust is earned, or earned back, with painful work. But it can also be given, as a leap of faith, or a gift.

Trusting God to provide, rather than counting on humans we can see and touch and receive directly from, is a big ask. Yet we are also in a time when our trust of other people has been stretched thin. For these past nearly two years, we've worried about others' approaches to risk and safety regarding COVID. We've had to make internal calculations and external negotiations around distancing, mask wearing, testing, vaccinations. We've had hard moments with family and friends and coworkers, felt betrayed by crashing dissonances between our own and others' attitude towards risk. To me, one of the cruelest consequences of this pandemic has been the erosion of our trust in each other. And I cannot write about trust the day after Kyle Rittenhouse was found not guilty on all counts without acknowledging that our criminal justice system has time and time again failed to earn the trust of people of color, through pervasive, unequal application of judgment and punishment.

Mistrust, day after day, outing after outing, verdict after verdict, is draining. It saps energy and joy. It keeps the corners of my mouth tight.

Last month, I lost a beloved teacher and mentor. Larry Gordon (z"l), founder of Village Harmony, a teen world folksong organization which I was part of for several years, taught me and my family, early, about trust. He taught us, through his example, to trust ourselves as singers, no matter our formal musical training or lack of it; to trust the music we came together to make; and to trust the strangers we met and stayed with in our travels. The camp sessions were set up with a week of rehearsal followed by two weeks of touring. On tour, we were hosted in the homes of members of whichever church, school, or other community center we were singing at, organized by the contact person there. We didn't know these people. They didn't know us. And yet—it worked. In the course of a single concert or workshop, we became a community, running on each other's trust, and worthy of it. No scandals, no tragedies. Larry trusted, and we—and our parents—trusted. That radical trust allowed magic to happen. I, with literally thousands of other singers, count my years with Village Harmony as formative.

Rabbi Bahya ibn Pequda (11th-century Spain) says of a person with bitachon, "If her request is not carried out for her ... she should thank God for having chosen for her what is good."2 In other words, trust in God frees us from disappointment when other people don't do what we ask or hope. I think that Larry's trust in the goodness of others and in everyone's human capability to sing and to enjoy song avoided disappointment in a different way. We all felt his trust, singers and drivers and teachers and organizers and hosts alike, and we rose to meet it. His trust called forth our capabilities in a way that the most exacting standards and protocols could not have.

Larry was a human, wonderful and fallible. But his trust has become a spiritual model for me. When I can feel God's trust in me to do the right thing and to be enough, I trust myself. And when I trust others more fully in the context of community, everyone wins. Trust is earned, or earned back, with painful work. But it can also be given, as a leap of faith, or a gift.

My prayer for us, as 2021 ends, is that we can start trusting other people once more. That we can become once again able to greet each other, not throwing caution to the winds, but without the small, frantic voice inside saying, "Is this okay? Can I relax with these people? Will their beliefs or behaviors action for climate justice. A Dayenu Circle is a small group of people who gather to discuss topics of interest regarding global, regional, and local climate issues and, if the group chooses, to engage in action to support climate campaigns.

endanger me?" I pray that bitachon can slowly help us assume best intentions and positive outcomes, with those we love and with those we have just (or have never) met. I pray that the disastrous skews in our justice system turn toward right and allow every resident in America to trust more in the courts and police departments and have that trust deserved. I pray the corners of our mouths turn up to smile again at a stranger's approach. And I pray that we will always trust that we have what each moment, and each goal, asks of us. We are enough.

RABBINIC INTERN ELLI'S REFLECTIONS

Four years ago, I went to my first Mussar class in Minneapolis. I trudged there every month during a cold winter from my home in Saint Paul. I gritted my teeth through traffic as my hands froze on the steering wheel, and I felt my own anxiety rise. I had a class to get to.

Self-improvement and personal development have always been really interesting to and resonant for me. I believe in the importance of continuing to grow and change, and I also know that, paradoxically, this growth and change is hardest to accomplish on your own. And so, as I began to contemplate rabbinical school, I signed up for the Mussar class, which talked about a centuries-long tradition and collection of Jewish wisdom for individual growth and transformation, accomplished in community and in relationship. It was even more interesting to hear this framed as a Jewish spiritual path.

Mussar acts as a path and a practice of trying to be your best self every day. It calls us to listen, to notice, to be with ourselves, and to be kind to ourselves. In Mussar, we focus on the places in our lives where we notice our potential to change, called bechira (choice) points. And it helps us do this daily, in the support of a community committed to growth.

I was trained as a Mussar facilitator earlier this year, and this month I'll be hosting my first Introduction to Mussar class here at Temple Emanu-El. If there's interest, I'm hoping to start an ongoing Mussar group in spring 2022. I look forward to sharing this tradition with you!

In Mussar, people work to become the best versions of themselves and on being the mensches we want to see in the world. Mussar focuses on growth by cultivating virtues, or middot, using Jewish frameworks and lenses for personal development. This approach can offer a practical method of realizing and practicing Jewish ethics, in order to live them. By focusing on how to improve ourselves, we also think spiritually about how we can each grow and be in touch with our own divine spark.

MEMBER SPOTLIGHT

Spotlight on Paula Breger, Library and Communications Committee Chair

Paula Breger has been a member of Temple Emanu-El since 2001. As HaSifriyah librarian, she chairs our Library Committee; Paula is also the communications director and a member of the executive committee. She is a member of the Association of Jewish Libraries' Jewish Fiction Award committee and serves as AJL's public relations chair. Paula and her husband, past Temple president David Belsky, live in West Newbury, Massachusetts; their child, Claire, is working toward an MFA in literary translation at the University of Iowa. Paula is a tea connoisseur (Earl Grey and chai, at appropriate times of day) and lover of theatre; she enjoys beaches, sunny walks, genealogy, rooting for the Los Angeles Lakers and Dodgers, and organizing her family's photos. Her home library—also catalogued—boasts an entire bookcase of J. R. R. Tolkien's works.

Paula grew up with a book in hand in Los Angeles, California, mere blocks from the Hollywood Walk of Fame. A contented introvert, she cut loose once a month at a nearby restaurant's all-ages, all-Bruce Springsteen club. (Springsteen's music is a passion Paula and David share!) In her first encounter with snow and humidity, she attended the University of Pennsylvania, where she and David met her senior year. Her analytical instinct and an interest in civil rights issues and bioethics brought Paula back to California to study law at UCLA. After graduation, Paula clerked for a federal judge in Los Angeles for two years before working in private practice. The loss of both her parents encouraged Paula to shift gears.

The Library Committee runs and organizes HaSifriyah, our temple library. As librarian, Paula also runs the Temple book club, which next meets on December 19 to discuss House on Endless Waters by Israeli novelist Emuna Elon. Upcoming HaSifriyah projects include recataloguing our collection using a system designed by Jewish librarians, accrediting our library through the AJL, and organizing a huge cache of photos, clippings, and other records of our temple's history. If you love exploring and organizing printed material, consider joining this committee!

The Communications Committee designs and creates our temple's internal communications (graphics, Shavuons, bulletins, etc.), publicizes our events to the wider world, and designs and maintains our temple website. It keeps our information accurate, organized, and looking good. The committee would particularly welcome the assistance of members who have ease with social media.

To get in touch with Paula and find out more about either committee, please email library@TempleEmanu-El.org or communications@TempleEmanu-El.org.

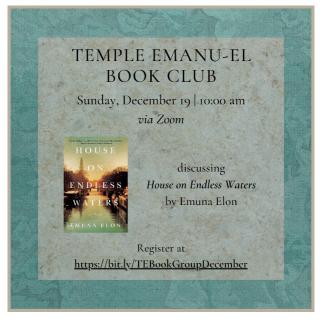

When she and David moved back east to be close to family, Paula followed her dream and started working at a bookstore—Borders Books and Music in Peabody. She cut her copyediting teeth on a friend's manuscript, and the rest is history.

Paula and David came to our temple looking for a family-friendly Jewish community in which to raise Claire. At the first Tot Shabbat service they attended, Rabbi Korinow got down on the floor with the kids and made them feel welcome. Claire spent their next year of TAPT (Toddlers and Parents Together) with Amy Moldoff. One of Paula's favorite Temple Emanu-El memories remains the Purim that Rabbi Korinow arranged to bring a llama to the building. "The joy on Claire's face was wonderful to see!"

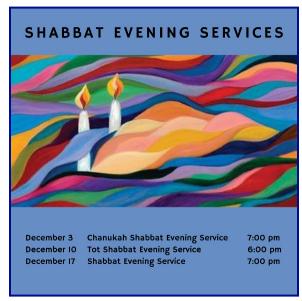

When Claire was in second grade, Paula took over HaSifriyah, starting by cataloging our holdings. She has since pushed the measly ten points the Dewey Decimal System allots to Judaism (290–299) to their very limits, bringing a wonderful breadth and depth of content to our library. Paula and Karen Newborn worked together to develop the annual Author Series, which continues on December 12 with Rahel Musleah presenting "Jewish Calcutta Through Music and Memory: The Personal Story of a Baghdadi Jewish Family."

Paula says that her three proudest accomplishments at the temple are the library, the Author Series, and having been part of the committee that hired Cantor Vera. Her creative instincts, firm editorial hand, devotion to clarity and accuracy, and generosity with her time and talents are inestimably important to our temple, and HaSifriyah is a treasure trove for students, professionals, community members, and all lovers of books. Thank you, Paula!

FALL/WINTER 2021 VIRTUAL AUTHOR SERIES

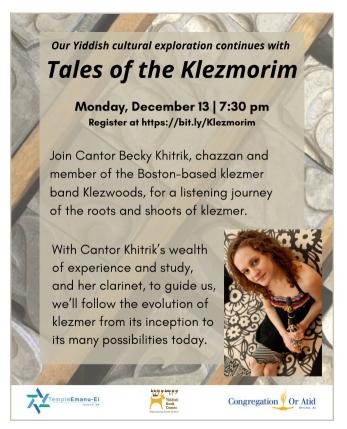

Rahel Musleah

Jewish Calcutta through Music and Memory: The Personal Story of a Baghdadi Jewish Family

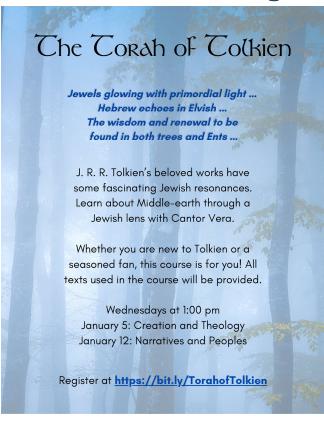

Sunday, December 12 | 11:00 am

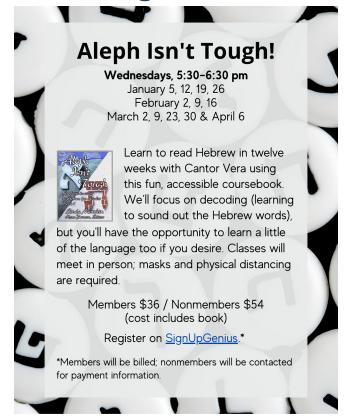

Through the vivid prism of her family's story and a heritage of lyrical songs, Rahel Musleah introduces audiences to the rich culture of the Jews of India and Iraq. The tale of her fascinating personal journey mirrors the story of Calcutta's Jews with humor, poignancy, and song. This universal story of community and immigration, loss and continuity, is filtered through her particular lens: born in Calcutta, she is the seventh generation of a Calcutta Jewish family that traces its roots to 17th-century Baghdad.

TEMPLE EMANU-EL S

Honor Your Father and Your Mother

It is a widely observed Jewish tradition to commemorate the passing of a loved one by memorializing those that have departed with a yahrzeit plaque on a dedicated memorial wall.

At Temple Emanu-El, these plaques are lit on the yahrzeit, or anniversary of death, and for Yizkor services.

Plaques are inscribed with the name of the deceased in both English and Hebrew as well as the date of the person's death. They are available to view whenever the sanctuary is open.

The one-time cost of the plaque is $300. To purchase a plaque in honor of a departed loved one, contact Nancy or Cantor Vera at 978.373.3861.
